The punishment of microsoft for its alleged "monopoly" on certain software should NOT be further exercised and the governmentl powers in charge of this so-called prosecution should turn about and proclaim microsoft absolved of any further blame or any further prosecution for alleged "monopoly" and an end to the entire incident should be proclaimed by the governmental agencies involved. Other firms who claim that their rights have been impinged on should procede forward with their own attempts at computer software innovations and get on with their own lives. The American way is to innovate and compete. Having Big Brother intercede is no more than mere whining to what some consider to be authority and usurption of other peoples' work in the innovative area of computers.
